

REMARKS

The Examiner, in the Official Action, objected to claim 37 for improper dependency. In this regard claim 37 has been amended to be properly dependent upon independent claim 1 and has also been amended to provide clarification of the claim.

The Examiner in response to Applicant's previous response has stated that these arguments have not been persuasive in that the Examiner argues that Chiles et al. discloses providing of an information card that includes information that can be used for allowing direct access to only one of a unique address for the user of the card. In this regard the Examiner has stated that the claims must be given the broadest reasonable interpretation consistent with the specification. In this regard, Applicant respectfully submits that the Examiner has not provided the broadest reasonable interpretation of the information card as taught and claimed by Applicant. The information card of the present invention is not directed to a piece of hardware for placement in a computer as taught by Chiles, but instead is directed to a card that provides information thereon allowing the user of the card to find access to a website. The ordinary definition of card as set forth in the New Webster's College Dictionary clearly sets forth a definition consistent with Applicant's interpretation and specification. (See attached definition). For example, the definition of card as set forth in the dictionary provides a small flat usually rectangular piece of stiff paper or thin pasteboard. Definition d: states one bearing a person's name and other information. The present invention is directed to such a card that does provide information to the user of the card. The card of Chiles et al. is directed to controlling access of a computer to a computer network. This is controlling access to a network using hardware on a computer whereas the present invention provides information used to access a web site from any computer or similar device. It is respectfully submitted that the interpretation provided by the Examiner is not reasonable in light of the teaching of Chiles' and the definition of card to which the present invention is directed. Clearly, the Chiles reference could not teach or suggest providing an information card as taught and claimed by Applicant.

Further, it would not be obvious to combine Chiles with Mindrum in that Chiles is directed to a piece of hardware for placement in a computer.

There is no teaching or suggestion that this could be or should be combined with the Mindrum reference. Thus, there is no motivation to make the suggested change by the Examiner as the two references are directed to totally different type systems. Chiles et al. is directed to a computer authorization system whereas Mindrum is directed to a computer system for displaying information of a deceased individual. Further, as previously discussed, even if the change were made, it would not fall within the reasonable interpretation of information card as set forth by Applicant in the claims and in the specification. As set forth at page 8, lines 6-26 and figure 3, there is provided an access card that includes a variety of information thus therein. This information allows the user to go to the site. There is no teaching or suggestion to providing an information card in Chiles as taught and claimed by Applicant.

In view of the foregoing it is respectfully submitted that the claims in their present form are in condition for allowance and such action is respectfully requested.

Respectfully submitted,
